Aaron Strickland’s North Carolina Origin

By Laurel T. Baty, CG

Records that should exist, but do not, need not be barriers. Thorough research and multiple comparisons can surmount such roadblocks.

When research subjects appear far from their birthplaces and without parental candidates, determining parentage may seem impossible. Analyzing records created soon after a migration and studying associates may reveal origins, however. Aaron Strickland illustrates the challenges and methods to overcome them.

Aaron is easily traced from Alabama, where he died, to Georgia, where he married. Backtracking to his birth, however, led to conflicting, misleading, missing, and puzzling records. Analysis, tabulation, and platting revealed Aaron’s origin, siblings, and father. These processes also showed that two records—an estate partition and a judge’s order—that helped answer the questions were rooted in misunderstanding and should not exist.

AARON STRICKLAND IN GEORGIA AND ALABAMA

Aaron had no obvious tie to Stricklands in Georgia or Alabama. Born in North Carolina in 1808–9, he married Susan Byrd on 25 August 1833 in Houston County, Georgia.1 Susan, daughter of William and Nancy (Rogers) Byrd, was born in 1815–20 in Gates County, North Carolina. She died in Houston County. before January 1837. Aaron and Susan had one daughter, Susan Mary. Daniel Strickland, age eighteen in Aaron’s 1850 Alabama household, might have been his son, born perhaps to a previous wife. Daniel appears in no other known record, including Aaron’s father-in-law’s will.

Aaron consistently associated with William Byrd. Aaron’s earliest Houston County record predates by a few months his marriage to William’s daughter. On 20 March 1833 both men bought items at an estate sale. William witnessed Aaron’s land purchase in Houston County on 28 December 1833 and its sale in 1835. Aaron headed no household in 1840, when he perhaps lived in William’s household in Russell County, Alabama. In 1841 Aaron witnessed William’s land purchase there. In 1843, as a county resident, he bought his own land. In 1857 Aaron purchased land in Russell County. In 1881, when Aaron’s daughter sold the land via a warranty deed, it lay in Lee County. No deed records Aaron’s transferring the land to her.

Aaron may have died about 1866. In his late fifties in August 1864, he was mustered into Company D of the Russell County Reserves. Enumerators for Alabama’s 1866 census recorded all household heads and “the whole number of the members belonging to his or her family, how many were lost in the service during the late war, died of sickness or were killed in battle, or were disabled by wounds.” Separately they enumerated white inhabitants by township. They sent two copies of each census to the state. All four survive for Russell County.

Aaron appears only on the two recording Civil War deaths. In the township enumerations Jane King appears in his place. Households on each side of her match those on the Civil War death schedules. No Russell or Lee County probate record exists for Aaron. Nor does he appear in Alabama’s 1867 voter registrations.

STRICKLANDS IN HOUSTON COUNTY, GEORGIA

Stricklands were scarce in Houston County, where none headed a household in 1830 or 1840. Just one record links Aaron directly to another Strickland there. Letters at the Perry, Georgia, post office on 1 April 1836 included one for “Riley Strickland or Aaron Strickland.” Aaron submitted a Houston County tax return in 1835. Riley defaulted in the same tax district.

Ancestry (http://search.ancestry.com/search/db.aspx?dbid=1576) > Alabama State Census, 1820–1866 > Russell > images 194 and 272, for 1866 Alabama state census, Russell Co., white pop. sch., pp. 51 and 40, Aaron Strickland. Aaron’s household contained one male 60–70, one female 20–30, and one male under 10. The census notes one soldier from the household was killed during the war. The census returns, signed by J. A. Dodson and undated, should reflect inhabitants as of 1 April 1866.

17. Ibid. > images 54 and 126, for Township 18, Range 29 East, unnumbered, and p. 53, Jane King. Her household includes one male under 10 and one female over 20. Differences between the enumerations suggest they were taken at different times. For example, 6 percent of the household heads enumerated in Township 18, Range 29, where Aaron owned land, were missing from the census recording Civil War deaths, and composition of 17 percent of the households changed between the enumerations.

Riley died in Houston County by late 1837; his probate record names no other Strickland. Joseph Culpepper applied for letters of administration on Riley’s estate. Containing only personal property, it was appraised on 9 February 1838. Riley’s unnamed widow was the only Strickland purchaser. Culpepper died before 10 February 1847, but his estate records show no Strickland tie. Houston County’s 1837 tax records, however, link Aaron indirectly to a third Strickland:

- Aaron filed a tax return for one poll in Terry’s district.
- Riley Strickland did the same in Bateman’s district.
- Blackburn Strickland, also in Bateman’s district, defaulted on filing a return.

Riley and Aaron paid taxes in different districts in 1837, but they lived near one another. Riley’s estate administrator, Joseph Culpepper, owned land near Aaron and paid his 1837 tax near Riley. “Blackburn” Strickland was Blackman Strickland, who lived in Randolph County, Georgia, in 1840. In 1837, while living in Houston County, he purchased land in Randolph County. By 1850 Blackman, born in North Carolina in 1807–8, had settled in Alabama.33 His age is in range for a brother of Aaron Strickland. Blackman’s unique name appears in Sampson County, North Carolina.34

STRICKLAND SIBLINGS IN SAMPSON COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

In 1841 Blackman and other heirs of Autry Strickland petitioned for a division of Autry’s land in Sampson County, North Carolina:

Moore, Jonathan, Isaac, Daniel, Mason, Blackman, Anna and Sally are the brothers and sisters of said Autry and your petitioners Franklin and Anne the only children of Joanna sister to the said Autry. That the said Joanna is dead intestate leaving no issue but your said Petitioners. That your Petitioners Anna and Sally are respectively married to the other petitioners Josiah Jackson and Rufus Vann.15

A later list names Aaron and Riley among Autry’s heirs and omits Mason:

There being Nine Heirs (viz) Moore Strickland, Daniel Strickland, Blackman Strickland, Rufus Van & wife, Aaron Strickland, Isaac Strickland, Josiah Jackson & wife, Jonathan Strickland and the Heirs of Riley Strickland dec.36

The second list is correct:

- Autry left two tracts—212 acres on Seven Mile Swamp and 165 acres on Little Orchard. The nine heirs received equal shares—about twenty-four acres of the Seven Mile Swamp land and about eighteen acres of the Little Orchard land.37 See figure 1 for the 165-acre tract. Absent a deed, the court sold part of Blackman’s share. Adjoining landowners included Aaron but not Mason.38

- Of the nine inheritances, only Isaac’s disposal of his share is recorded. The adjoining landowners’ names—W. C. Dudley, Joanna “Stricklin,” and Daniel “Stricklin” for one tract; and William C. Dudley and Blackman Strickland for the other—suggest Isaac sold both his and Jonathan’s shares. That Joanna held Riley’s share shows she was his living widow, not a deceased sister.
- Benjamin F. Strickland, born in North Carolina in 1833–34, and Aaron Strickland, born in Georgia in 1836–37, apparently were Riley and Joanna’s children, identified as Franklin and Anne in the petition. Joanna and the children lived in Moore Strickland's 1850 household.\textsuperscript{40} Joanna's age (ten years older than Moore) and the petition's naming her and the children show they were not Moore's heirs.\textsuperscript{41} Moore was alive when Isaac's deed named Joanna as a landholder.\textsuperscript{42}

Subsequent transfers of the 165-acre sections refer to heirs Josiah Jackson and Riley, Moore, and Blackman Strickland.\textsuperscript{43} When William A. THE SIBLINGS' FATHER

Fire and war destroyed Sampson County's early probate records, pre-1867 marriage records, and pre-1877 tax rolls. Other sources confirm that Autry's nine heirs were Isaac's children.\textsuperscript{47} Of the ten siblings, eight were males.

Isaac headed the only large Sampson County Strickland household in 1800–30.\textsuperscript{48} The children’s ages and sex correspond to Autry’s heirs. See table 1.

Enumerator error caused the omission of the 1810 Strickland heirs’ household. Two Isaac Stricklands, born about ten years apart, lived in Sampson County from at least 1808 through 1840.\textsuperscript{49} Their associates distinguish them:\textsuperscript{50}

- The elder Isaac associated with the Westbrook family. He was a road hand under Joseph Vick in 1800 and Joseph Westbrook in 1802–3.\textsuperscript{51} Isaac’s 1800 neighbors served on the same crews.\textsuperscript{52} He witnessed a deed to Moses Westbrook in 1807.\textsuperscript{53} In 1810 Isaac purchased items at William Westbrook’s estate sale.\textsuperscript{54} In 1811 Isaac Strickland exchanged adjacent thirty-three–acre parcels with Moses Westbrook.\textsuperscript{55} Despite Isaac’s proximity to Moses, he was not enumerated near Moses in 1810.\textsuperscript{56} In 1815, however, they paid taxes in the same district.\textsuperscript{57}
- The younger Isaac became a constable in Captain Draughon’s District in 1809. In 1810 he served as a poll keeper there, along with John Tew and John McCorquodale. All three men were enumerated near one another in 1810. Isaac became a road overseer in 1813, and several of his 1810 neighbors served under him. He, McCorquodale, Tew, and George Draughon paid tax in Captain Godwin's District in 1815.

The elder Isaac was the ten siblings' father. Only one Isaac Strickland was enumerated in 1810. The absence of young children in his household shows he was the younger man, not the heirs' father.

Financial disaster struck Isaac's family shortly before his death. His son, Daniel, was indicted for forgery. Isaac and Moore Strickland posted a thousand-dollar bond to secure Daniel's court appearance. Forfeiting the bond, Daniel did not appear. Isaac, already deep in debt, owned about 900 acres. The Sampson County sheriff sold at least 705 acres, in three tracts, to pay Isaac's debts.

Isaac died in 1840. Alive on 1 May 1840, he headed no 1840 household. On 16 August 1841 Isaac's son Moore Strickland described Isaac as "Deced."

Moore requested 100 acres but was only granted 9½ acres. Isaac's land was not mentioned in the plat of the grant.
Sampson County holds no probate record for Isaac, who likely left no property.\textsuperscript{68}

AUTRY’S 212-ACRE TRACT

Land connects the senior Isaac to Autry and his siblings. In 1841 Moore Strickland’s share of Autry’s land was two tracts totaling forty-two acres. By 1847 Moore reportedly held 212 acres “adjoining the lands of Mrs. Mary Bizzell, Mrs. Edith Ellis, John Hudson & others on the waters of the Seven mile swamp.” A judge ordered the sheriff to sell this land to pay Moore’s debts.\textsuperscript{69} No surviving deed records Moore’s acquiring 212 acres or the sheriff’s selling it.\textsuperscript{70}

Moore’s alleged 212 acres was the Seven Mile Swamp tract partitioned among Autry’s heirs in 1841. Josiah Denning sold 250 acres on Seven Mile Swamp to John Hudson on 9 September 1844.\textsuperscript{71} The description of Moore’s 212 acres in 1847 names Hudson as a neighbor but not Denning. Figure 2 shows that Denning’s eastern border resembles the western border of Autry’s heirs’ land.

Only one deed records Autry purchasing land—the 169 acres on Little Orchard—yet his estate contained 377 acres.\textsuperscript{72} Autry likely died about 1830.\textsuperscript{73} His heirs petitioned to divide his land over a decade after his death. How did he acquire the 212 acres later attributed to his brother Moore Strickland? The tract’s division implies Autry held a clear title, but did he?

Moore and Autry’s father, Isaac, had owned this land. Most of Isaac’s neighbors bordered Autry’s 212 acres.\textsuperscript{74} Figure 3 shows Isaac’s 206 acres superimposed over Autry's partitioned 212 acres. A plat of two parcels that Isaac purchased in 1815 resembles the 206 acres the sheriff sold to pay Isaac's debts. It also resembles Autry's 212 acres partitioned among his siblings.

The sheriff sold Isaac’s land in lots with different configurations from Isaac’s purchases. Four years lapsed between the sheriff’s selling Isaac’s 206 acres, on 19 August 1839, and his making the deed, dated 21 November 1843. In 1841 Isaac’s children perhaps believed the land was theirs, as part of Autry’s or Isaac Sr.’s estate. Apparently learning otherwise, the siblings made no deed disposing of shares of Autry’s 212 acres. Six years later Moore Strickland’s creditors perhaps believed he owned that land, leading a judge to order a sale that could not occur.

GEORGIA MIGRATION

Aaron was the first sibling to leave North Carolina for Georgia. Riley and Blackman were in Sampson County in 1833, when Aaron appeared in Houston County. Riley left Sampson County in late 1834 and Blackman left in late 1836, consistent with their Houston County appearances. See table 2.

Hinnant Byrd also migrated to Houston County from Sampson County about 1833. He sold land in Sampson County in 1832 and bought land in Houston County in early 1833. In 1845 Hinnant and his brother Nathan, both of Houston County, gave Curtis Thompson power of attorney to help settle their father’s Sampson County estate. No known records link the Sampson County Byrds and Stricklands, but Hinnant’s migration suggests Aaron’s relocation was part of a community movement.

Other than the deed recording the division of Autry Strickland’s land, no known record connects Aaron Strickland of Georgia and Alabama to Sampson County. Aaron bought and sold no land, witnessed no deeds, and appeared in no court record. Other men had his name:

- Aaron Strickland of Wayne County, North Carolina, sold Sampson County land in 1808. He was too old to be Autry’s brother.
- A younger Aaron, son of Riley, was too young to be Autry’s brother.

Aaron, Blackman, and Riley Strickland appeared together in two places—Sampson County, North Carolina, and Houston County, Georgia. Riley died before 1841. Furthermore, no census names Riley Strickland born between 1800 and 1810. Only one Blackman or Blackburn Strickland, born 1800 to 1810, appears in the census from 1830 to 1880—the resident of Houston County who bought land there in 1837. Although several Aaron Stricklands lived in Georgia and North Carolina, only one lived in Houston County at the same time as Riley and Blackman. He married Susan Byrd in 1833, lived in the same tax district as Riley in 1835, and appeared with him as a letter’s addressee in 1836.

CONCLUSION

Aaron Strickland’s Georgia migration obscures his North Carolina origin. Marriage into another kinship group, and another migration, distanced him from his biological relatives. Only two of Aaron’s many siblings followed him to Georgia. One brother died soon after arrival; Aaron and the other parted a few years later. Thorough research, assembled evidence, and resolved conflicts support the conclusion that Aaron and his brothers were sons of the senior Isaac Strickland of Sampson County, North Carolina.
